

the divine feminine

2024

Acrylic on canvas

The divine feminine is the first in a two-part series made as I was coming to terms with the fact that I am trans. This piece depicts the post-transition version of me killing the pre-transition version of me, while still holding her gently with love and forgiveness. The piece is less about an act of violence and moreso one of transformation and letting go of the things that hold you back in order to become your ideal self.

femina ex machina

2024

Acrylic and cyanotype ink on canvas

Femina ex machina is the second piece in this two-part series, made a few months into my medical and social transition. Around this time, I began to feel incredibly isolated by my transition, and made this piece to reflect on and depict some of the hardships and joys that transitioning had brought me. Through creating this piece, I was able to find solace in the path I had chosen.